Are you in the beginning stages or in the middle of a research study? Or perhaps you are at the end of the process and getting ready to publish? Whether you are at the beginning, middle or last stage of research you can turn to your liaison librarian for help. Before beginning your research, consider consulting with your liaison librarian to explore what has been published on your research topic. We can help you determine the gaps within the existing literature. We're also available to meet with your research team to identify key databases and search terms, as well as instruct them on how to effectively use RefWorks citation management tool to help organize and cite your sources. When you are ready to publish, contact us to help you narrow the list of potential journals that have published related articles in your field. At any stage of your research, we are here to help!

Tip of the Month Library Website gets a new look!

The new Himmelfarb Library website will launch on January 2, 2014. The new look features a less cluttered design and focuses on providing easy access to the key databases and resources, like the popular search box "Health Information @ Himmelfarb," that users access the most. The new design will have a mobile-tailored interface and automatically detect mobile devices. Users will now be able to seamlessly search our resources from their laptop, iPad/tablet, or smart phone.
