The migration of traditional anatomy and pathology wet labs to a digital format requires significant planning and collaboration amongst key faculty, administrative, and technology personnel. In addition to conversion of course materials, the changed format necessitated the renovation of a traditional bench lab to a state-of-the-art digital classroom, significant IT investment, and ongoing coordination by library, classroom, and computer resources personnel. Standardized policies and procedures were developed to guide additional requests for software to support new educational initiatives.